THE BRITISH ROCK.

Everywhere in the world rock has taken on symbolic importance. It is generally based on the key factor of substance and permanence. In its natural state it provides foundation for everything ranging from the soils for natural plant growth, Man's agriculture and later a great substance for foundations of valued structures.

In one part of The British Isles a range of hills, The Preseli Hills in Wales, have been the source of a very special rock Preseli Bluestone and this stone has been used in one of the world's most famous places, Stonehenge.

Stonehenge and its stones are a focus of very special sensitivities similar to those used to create the first three great pyramids and with associated with all of them fascinating mystery.

We will take one of these special bluestones on a symbolic journey round Britain. All can touch it and it will be available to those who can see it and those who are blind. It can be touched by those that are deaf, those that are young and those that are old. All people regardless of race or class will have the same opportunity.

Underlying our story is threads of this appreciation and honouring of substance and the application of caring thoughts, good design and sound practical application of development skills.

The Preseli Bluestone will carry through Time memories of association and its positioning amongst rocks from other parts of the world will add to a menu of great inherent value in The International Peace Garden.

The rock was selected on 3rd August 2011.
